

The PREP-IT Trial

PREP-IT

Jeff Wells, one of our stakeholders, said that being a part of this trial was like “peeking behind the curtain” of research, much like the Wizard of Oz.

Exciting work is happening for this trial. On May 14th there was a Grand Rounds call and two presentations about how this trial might influence other types of health research. The PREP-IT Stakeholder Advisory Board (SAB) met at the end of June to talk about ways to share results and share their unique experience back to the broader community. Currently, our patient stakeholders and the PATIENTS team members are working on a draft of an academic paper. We hope to send the article to a journal by the end of the summer.

We are also working on an image to go with this paper that shows the PREP-IT Trial’s journey and the experience of our stakeholders in shaping this study. In thinking about this process, Jeff Wells, one of our stakeholders, said that being a part of this trial was like “peeking behind the curtain” of research, much like the Wizard of Oz. We hope to use his words to help make this image.
